Abortionist Who Bragged Babies Can't Scream Because She Cuts Their Cords Has Medical License Suspended

Torres has made "public statements related to the practice of medicine which violate the high standards of honesty, diligence, prudence, and ethical integrity demanded from physicians licensed to practice in Alabama."

Twitter-famous Alabama abortionist Dr. Leah N. Torres had her medical license suspended on August 27. Additionally, the Tuscaloosa abortion clinic where she serves as medical director, West Alabama Women's Center, had their application to practice medicine denied by the Alabama Board of Medical Examiners the day prior.

Torres, who made waves on Twitter back in 2018 for boasting about cutting the vocal cords of babies so she can't hear their screams during abortions, apparently made fraudulent statements on her application, according to the medical board, AL.com reported Thursday.

"The Board denied an application for a certificate of qualification on Aug. 19, and on Aug. 27 temporarily suspended her license to practice medicine 'until a hearing is held on the allegations against her,'" the report said, adding, "The letter of notice from the Board of Medical Examiners says that Torres, in her application, gave false answers to several questions including whether her staff privileges had ever been revoked or suspended at any hospital or health care facility.”

The letter of notice also said that Torres has made “public statements related to the practice of medicine which violate the high standards of honesty, diligence, prudence, and ethical integrity demanded from physicians licensed to practice in Alabama,” AL.com noted.

As reported by The Daily Wire back in 2018, Torres was defending her job as an abortionist, and gruesome partial-birth abortion in particular, when she posted a tweet about cutting a baby’s vocal cords before they have the “opportunity” to cry out in pain.

“So [if] it’s not for the money, is it because you just like infanticide?” one Twitter user asked Torres. “Do you hear their heartbeats when you lay down at night? Do you hear their screams?”

The abortionist responded: “No. You know fetuses can’t scream, right? I transect the cord 1st so there’s really no opportunity, if they’re even far enough along to have a larynx.”

“I won’t apologize for performing medicine,” added Torres. “I’m also a ‘uterus ripper outer,’ if that’s how you’d like to describe hysterectomy.”

The depraved tweet has since been deleted.

During the Twitter back-and-forth, the abortionist stressed that she doesn’t abort babies for the money, but for some undeclared righteous reason, apparently.

Spokeswoman for the West Alabama Women’s Center Robin Marty claimed that Torres’ medical license suspension was likely “based on misunderstandings.”

“West Alabama Women’s Center is following all state guidelines regarding its operation,” said Marty. “We believe the actions taken regarding Dr. Torres’s licensing application are based on misunderstandings concerning documents she filed with the Board of Medical Examiners and the Medical Licensure Commission. We know Dr. Torres to be an entirely honorable and professional doctor and look forward to the resolution of the issues relating to her application and license.”

As noted by AL.com, the abortion clinic was responsible for “3,371 abortions in 2018, out of 6,484 that year statewide, according to the Alabama Center for Health Statistics.”

CREEPY: Abortionist Gets Defensive — And Then Depraved — On Twitter

By Emily Zanotti

Mar 14, 2018 DailyWire.com

Dr. Leah Torres is a famous enough abortionist that she's earned a "Verified" blue check mark on Twitter, and Monday night, after a confrontation with pro-lifers on the social media platform, she got very real about how sick and twisted she really is, trying to defend her job of ending the lives of children in the womb.

It started out with Dr. Torres attempting to explain that she performs abortions for the love of murdering pre-term children, rather than for the money. After all, she says, she could earn much more delivering live babies than delivering dead ones. And as for that Hippocratic Oath she took, well, that's an ancient Greek tradition, and she believes she "does no harm" as required by the promise all doctors take upon earning their degree, by ending pre-born lives rather than allowing women to carry an "unwanted" pregnancy to term.

But, finally backed into a corner, Dr. Torres got very depraved.

Confronted with the idea that children subjected to partial-birth abortion — a procedure that allows doctors to kill a baby mere moments before birth — feel pain, and even cry during the process, Dr. Torres shared her secret for scream-free murders: you cut the child's vocal cords before you complete the rest of the "procedure."

So if it's not for the money, is it because you just like infanticide?

Do you hear their heartbeats when you lay down at night?

Do you hear their screams?

No.

You know fetuses can't scream, right? I transect the cord 1st so there's really no opportunity, if they're even far enough along to have a larynx.

I won't apologize for performing medicine. I'm also a "uterus ripper outer," if that's how you'd like to describe hysterectomy. <https://t.co/lng0W3ta5J>

For the first time in a long time, Twitter was shocked — at least momentarily — into silence.

Of course, that didn't last for long. National Review's Charles Cooke chimed in with some advice for Dr. Torres for the next time she giddily admits to mutilating children as she pulls them screaming (or in parts) from their mothers wombs: maybe don't let everyone know exactly how you avoid being haunted by the deaths of so many babies.

Sickening. Just sickening.
