Trump's Female Appointees

It is a feat so great that President Barack Obama was unable to accomplish it.

President George W. Bush did better than his republican predecessors, but still fell a bit short.

Even President Bill Clinton came under fire from women's organizations for his shortcomings on delivering a cabinet that "looks like America."

The unattainable feat?

Hiring an astounding number of women for senior-level positions in the White House.

Luckily for women everywhere, in 2018 it has finally been accomplished.

However, just because Trump doesn't receive credit for his hiring of women doesn't mean it's any less significant.

His list of female appointees is long:

Nikki Haley, Ambassador to the United Nations (not only a woman but also child of Indian American Sikh immigrants);

Elaine Chao, Secretary of Transportation; Kirstjen Nielsen, Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security;

Dr. Heather Wilson, Secretary of the Air Force;

Sarah Sanders, White House Press Secretary;

Kellyanne Conway, Counselor to the President;

Linda McMahon, Administrator of the U.S. Small Business Administration;

Betsy DeVos, Secretary of Education;

Jovita Carranza, U.S. Treasurer (also a minority and first-generation Mexican American immigrant);

Neomi Rao, Regulation Czar (also a minority and daughter of parents from India);

Seema Verma, Administrator of the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (also a minority);

Heather Brand, Associate Attorney General;

Kelly Sadler, Director of Surrogate & Coalitions Outreach;

Mercedes Schlapp, Senior Communications Advisor (also a minority whose father was once a political prisoner of Fidel Castro);

Ivanka Trump, Advisor to the President;

Hope Hicks, Communications Director;

Jessica Ditto, Deputy Director of Communications; and

Dina Powell, Deputy National Security Adviser who according to White House sources will remain in her position through the end of January and will likely be replaced by another woman after Powell completes her first year in office.

In addition to the career professionals in the White House, there is the somewhat reluctant First Lady Melania Trump, who arguably has stepped up to the plate bigtime in times of crisis such as Hurricane Harvey (in five-inch stiletto heels, no less.)

With their first year in office under their belts, most of the women listed above will convene tomorrow for a “Conversation with the Women of America” to discuss economics, health care, national security and how in their respective roles they intend to continue helping “Make America Great Again” during the second year of the Trump administration.

If liberals today had any shred of intellectual honesty left among them, they would admit that Trump’s placement of women in senior level positions is impressive and establishes a precedent that helps their own daughters and granddaughters.

Unfortunately, the left will never admit it.

Regardless of what one thinks of Trump the man, there is no denying the numbers of women he has placed in power in the West Wing. As we commemorate the one-year anniversary of his inauguration this week, I predict that history will eventually reveal the complete story – that Trump’s actions are not only a small step for a male republican president but a giant leap for all of womankind, regardless of political party.
